Sandra Jeffs
Jewellery Designer, Author & Poet, USA

Sandra's second book of poetry deals with abuse and healing from abuse. She is a strong advocate for using daily acts of kindness and positive music to heal abuse wounds. Since four out of five people have experienced some form of significant abuse in his or her lifetime (verbal, mental, emotional, bullying, physical or sexual abuse) and fewer than 30% seek any form of help to heal, most survivors have stuffed the abuse down deep ("just get over it"). The fact is that unless the abuse is excavated and healed, it will rear its ugly head in the form of (1) running and hiding when things get rough, or (2) sinking into self-doubt or low self-esteem when a similar type of abuser enters her life, or worse, (3) becoming an abuser herself. Unhealed abuse wounds lurk in our psyche and will be an obstacle to achieving our full potential in life. Sandra's "Kindness Practice" and "Positive Song Music Therapy" are two ways she used and advocates to excavate and heal abuse wounds. They are also ways for anyone, wounded or not, to become their best self and to make a difference in the world.

Sandra Wallin
Chiron's Way Counselling Coaching & Consulting, Canada

Sandra Wallin is a belief builder and creation catalyst whose passion is helping people and businesses move from stuck to stupendous – TODAY!

As a child, Sandra watched her father give his life to his work and in her twenties, she watched his work take his life. After two excruciating rounds with cancer, her father confided his regret about taking the road more traveled, which led to a job that paid the bills, but did nothing to fill his heart. In those last hours, Sandra vowed to her dad, and to herself, that moving forward she would only do what she loved – a promise she has kept.

Known as a change agent, motivational teacher and sacred space holder, Sandra is a transformer who debunks the myths that change is painful and slow, that you have to know why you are the way you are in order to change and that you can't teach an old dog new tricks.

Kerry Gibson
President, EcoCentury Technologies, Canada

Kerry Gibson was born in Williams Lake but travelled extensively as part of her upbringing, primarily to England and New Zealand. Her father worked for Indigenous Affairs as a band manager and economic advisor, and "The Honour Of All" was filmed about some of the work that he was involved in on the reserve working with the chief and her husband. That experience of being on the reserve as a child in that generation was very unique as the family were integrated into their culture and experienced things Caucasian people had no knowledge of. Prior to that, he was a successful contractor and Kerry learned how to do math by doing his books. Her mother was a teacher and home-schooled the sisters when they were traveling or not in cousin's classrooms. She encouraged Kerry's artistic side ensuring she learned various musical instruments, Arts, writing and so forth while her father was her first soccer coach, taught her how to build, was the only 8 year old in her class who could run a table saw, float her horses teeth or deworm her, or surf, and both of her parents stressed the importance of community participation and volunteerism. Kerry would help out alongside them as they ran committees, supported neighbours, built community.

Bonita Zarrillo
Municipal Politician, Canada

Continuously empowering women is a personal goal of mine both in my public and private life. As part of my public work as an elected municipal politician, and in my private work as a member of the Soroptimists of the Americas, I work to raise the profile of needs of women and girls of diverse ages, socio-economic, and cultural backgrounds. I am pleased to see that women are becoming more visible in elected roles across all levels of government yet the numbers in Canada still need work. More women in government ensures that their needs within communities are better understand and there is a better chance to overcome the barriers. I am excited about the opportunities for more transformation at the city level, including additional advocacy for female bureaucrats – chips make chunks" is one of my favourite sayings and I would like to be one of the 'chips' in ensuring more women influence the quality of life and decision making processes in local government.

Women leading new global thinking and change

by iSha DalaYa

The BC Women's Economic Forum will take place in Surrey under the title Women Leading New Global Thinking & Change Nov. 16-17.

Based in New Delhi, India, WEF organizes conferences around the world, often gathering women from more than 50 different nations. In this context, The Source met two B.C. women who will attend WEF as guest speakers: Anita Huberman, CEO of the Surrey Board of Trade; and Bonita Zarillo, city counselor of Coquitlam.

WEF is part of ALL Ladies League, the largest global women's chamber in the world. For Zarillo, such organizations are crucial because they enable "women to increase the size of their networks." For Huberman too, conferences like WEF play an important role.

"They provide women and men opportunities to hear different perspectives, to learn from each other, to inspire each other, how to do better in the world, not only from a business perspective but a personal perspective. When you bring people together at such events, it is about collaboration, new ideas and new programs for people around the world," she says.

Skilled workers needed

"[There is] a necessity of focusing on ways to capture that, for women to have more opportunities and to be confident about doing so," says Huberman.

According to Huberman, this will become even more relevant in the future, as the workforce is constantly changing, especially in the face of automation. The Surrey Board of Trade has been working together with local universities and manufacturers in B.C. so that needs on both sides can be matched in order to tackle this problem of skill shortage.

"We want to provide appropriate training programs, whether it is in welding, making machines, or aerospace and we had some success in that," she says.

A focus on women and underrepresented groups

In her talk at WEF, Zarillo will focus more on attitudes and behaviours that lead women to success.

"I want to share the experience of moving from business into local government and I do think we need more women's voices at all levels of government. I hope I can inspire women to consider this as a career option," she says.

Zarillo was appalled by the lack of diversity on her council and that inspired her to change things. Her role within the city council is to remind decision makers about the existence of people who are normally underrepresented, like women or people with disabilities.

"I am constantly putting a gender lens on initiatives and planning. It is interesting how easy it is to forget about it. [...] It just takes somebody to mention it. It is not until somebody speaks out that people will start thinking about this issue and they will realize it is missing," she says.

This year, WEF collaborated together with the Vancouver International South Asian Film Festival to celebrate stories from countries that are usually not represented by mainstream cinema like India, Pakistan and Afghanistan.

"It is a wonderful idea to connect the art world with women and leadership. It widens the audience for WEF and I do think that there is a need to bring more people than just those interested in business and the economic forum together because there is also a component of leadership that is important in everyday life. I think it is a wonderful idea and I am looking forward to enjoying some of the films," says Zarillo.

Women Economic Forum comes to Vancouver with VISAFF

Darpan News Desk, 10 Nov, 2017

An associate of All Ladies League (ALL), the Women's Economic Forum (WEF) is a global conference to foster empowering conversations and connections among women committed to promoting constructive changes in all walks of life.

WEF is much more than a regular business conference. It's filled with an uplifting energy of "yes, we all can." Aimed at empowering women economically for their stronger leadership, WEF enables massive global exposure and access to connections worldwide to help grow businesses internationally, raise funds, encourage new start-ups, gain knowledge about new trends in technology and innovations and enable creative collaborations.

The main theme for WEF 17 is "Creating, Innovating, Understanding and Driving the Future." The agenda encompasses 36 vertical themes plus 5 verticals on B2B, Corporate presentations, Country presentations, Workshops/Masterclasses and Start-Ups/Entrepreneurship shared over 500 sessions in cities around the world.

During the WEF forums, individual delegates as well as corporates and country representatives are invited to share their business expertise, their learning, their stories, their inspiration, their drive and focus and their message or cause as a speaker, panelist or moderator in any of these verticals.
